JUST THE "FACTS"

Dear Airhead,
In your article "Avant Garde Artist", Rick Gibson wrongly criticized Lifeforce for not protesting against the Langley poundkeepers shooting of dogs in the head (March 1990).

If Gibson had checked the facts he would have discovered that Lifeforce convinced the Langley Township Council to stop shooting pound dogs in January 1990. If he was so concerned why didn't he protest it? The media had blown out of proportion Gibson's publicity stunt of crushing animals for "art". He had no profound statement about art. He had no insight into life's problem. His press release in December 1989 made it clear that his only goal was to kill "small animals" as a new "art medium".

I enclose the facts about this bizarre incident. I hope you will give the public both sides of the issue.

In respect for all life,
Peter Hamilton
Director of Lifeforce

Thanks for the "facts." The point, however, would seem to be that there was such an uproar over one rat, which was destined to die in the stomach of some reptilian pet, yet unwanted dogs are still being killed, now by injection instead of being shot (possibly more humane, but dead is dead), and other Sniffers continue to end their lives as pet food.

IT'S A DIRTY JOB...

Dear Airhead,
OK, Disorder...you've had it. I'm really sick of it now. You can print this as a letter to Airhead or as an actual article, I don't care. All I want is that somebody has to do it since you people are obviously so braindead-lazy you won't or can't, I'm not sure which.

Anyways, here it is: THE REAL LOCAL MOTION:
Here it is folks, the "let's bring Vancouver up to date article" from the lame-ass Disorder. This month, we'll take a look at the vinyl happenings in Vancouver in the last while.

Over a year ago, a big vinyl deal went down with three local Vancouver bands that most hep cats are already aware of. The most talked about deal definitely got to be THE SCRAMBLERS and their infamous Pentas agreement. Contrary to popular rumor the band has not been thrown off the label for being rude, drunk, and just downright obnoxious. No, the deal was definitely like that sorta stuff and therefore THE SCRAMBLERS album has not been shafted! The record is just a mere six months late and counting... Second in the deal was BRUNO GERUSSIS'S MEDACTIONS. No, they were signed to WEA Records and have since put out a garage-pop type LP entitled "In Search Of The Fourth Chord" and is a great offering of fun tunes. But we wouldn't know that right? God knows DISORDER didn't review the album!

The last band was Copyrite. This band (who's members include a couple of guys from SLÖW) got the best of the band. They were signed to Geffin records of L.A. and were basically given $25,000.00 to record with to make the best damn album possible. What did Copyrite do with the cash? They spent most of it on hot dogs, beer and other fun stuff... besides recording costs. What is happening with the Geffin-Copyrite connection now? You got me, but there ain't no album in the near future, that's for sure.

On the brighter side of things in the Teamworks part of town, Bob's Your Uncle has been officially signed to a major record label from L.A. so we should be seeing and hearing a great follow-up LP to their first vinyl offering "From Zulu back in '87". Also in anticipation is a full-length album from Vancouver's Kings of rockability, the Nervous Fellas. The Nervous Fellas were signed a while back to Nervous Records in England, but at this time there won't be much more of a wait.

I guess there isn't much point in mentioning the two new album releases from both D.O.A. and Spirit of the West. Both bands are now on major labels.

New Vancouver releases have also come from "hardcore young, playful punks Curious George, on an independent label, and also from CTR's own "garage king" Markwas the Human Serviette, on his very own indie label. Curious George's LP, "Children Of A Common Mother" is an absolutely excellent offering of really fun punk music in the tradition of the Sex Pistols and the Stooges. I often find myself slamming with my cat when rocking to this LP. Nardwar's record is another rocker but in a different sense. This record, entitled "Oh God, My Mom's On Channel Ten!" is a garage-rock compilation album featuring fourteen garage bands from all over North America. From Vancouver, local garage legends, THE ENIGMAS appear, as well as two up and coming garage bands THE SMUGGLERS and Nardwar's own band THE EVAPORATEES. What makes this comp. really special along with the variety of great garage tunes is nutty inter-segmented between songs of Nardwar "versus" such notables as Jello Biafra and ex-U.S. president Gerald Ford. Also included in the package is a hilarious booklet featuring pictures and bios on all bands included.

On the smaller side of things, Dirt has been in the studio lately recording a soon-to-be-released EP. Also in midst of album making is the aforementioned garage-rock outfit THE SMUGGLERS. Other bands like the HARD BROCK MINERS and SARCASTIC MANNEQUINS are holding back from the indie thing, in search of a minor-major deal (with no pun intended).

I kinda wish these bands would put out an indie record so we can have something to listen to while we wait! Yes, one could argue that these two bands, as well as many other bands, put out tapes. But let's face it, TAPES SUCK. You know it, I know it.

Take ROOTS ROUNDUP for instance. They just put out a brand new tape! What a waste! Tapes are nothing. They can hardly be counted anywhere past the demo file. But back on track... also searching for a deal is the small but mighty Chris Houston. Whether he plans to do another solo album or an LP with his brand new band EVIL TWANG (featuring Art Bergmann who's second solo album just came out, as most of you should be aware) is unknown but either would surely be entertaining, thought-provoking and disgusting. And that as far as I'm aware, is the vinyl happenings in Vancouver in the present and near-past. Next month DISORDER will try to bring you more REAL LOCAL MOTION but will probably fail. Oh, and one more thing. Just in case you're deaf and blind, NOMEANSNO put out their year best album so far earlier this year entitled "WRONG", which has been selling like wildfire throughout North America and Europe.

See ya...
 most of the released albums listed are available at local indie record stores such as ZULU, SCRATCH, or TRACK.

So are we "braindead-lazy" and "lame-ass," eh? And you write one letter that tells all about the local scene. BIG FUCKING DEAL. Once is never enough, so put up or shut up. If'n you got what it takes, do something on a regular basis rather than an oh-so-easy one off postshot.

But about your specific points... Why is the Scramblers record soooo late then? Could it be that Pentas lost its distribution deal with Elektra in the U.S., and the whole future of the record label and its acts is up in the air.

The unpaid individuals who contribute to Disorder determine the contents of the magazine. No one wanted to review the BGM record so it wasn't reviewed. That's how it works (or doesn't).

Bob's Your Uncle's EP was on Criminal Records, not Zulu. We've reviewed Curious George live, reviewed their LP, and did a feature on them. We've given our own Nardwar (He writes for us don't ya know. Check out his Cramps interview in this issue.) coverage in the past. With Nardwar being one of our own there is the little problem of conflict of interest, however. And how can any of us be objective about a project by someone we love so much? Also, Dirt has done some recording, but the outcome of which is as yet undiscided. Finally, the Smugglers should actually have a single out on Get High Records (The Cynics' label) come June or July.

JUVENILE MASQUERADE Yo, Airhead,

Those coming to Viola's defense have missed the point. Most everyone will agree that reviewers shouldn't lie about their opinions and that reviewers with an attitude are more interesting to read.

However, Viola's reviews consistently gloss over such important elements as Music and Performance and dwell over the deeper questions of cloth, hair length, who knows who, and does anyone cool-enough-to-count-as-human-by-Viola's-standards like the band, etc. It's fine that Ms Funk's "pieces" set print, but as reviews, they are juvenile.

Fred Maycatt
P.S. I don't like Hell's Kitchen, either, but at least it doesn't masquerade as something it isn't.

PRIVILEGE AND MOTIVATION Dear Airhead,

I am appalled by some of the ignorant people who work in the record business. As a journalist for a small college in Calgary, Alberta, I have had the privilege of reviewing alternative rock concerts and records. I have taken great pleasure meeting new innovative people. But sometimes, I have come across some rude people.

Just last Friday, I had a chance to catch Jane Siberry live, and what an exciting performance it was. Yet, an incident occurred that left me wondering what is happening to this world. While preparing to take pictures of Jane, I met a rude and obnoxious "specimen". He was an American photographer for a few major record companies in Canada. He told me the most demeaning thing that left me pondering my self-worth. He said, "The record companies and music stars couldn't care less if some two bit newspaper covered the concert." I had to question this generalization and his motivation for even being in the record business, maybe the title and money.

Anyways, I was really astonished by his comment. I personally think the university and college newspapers keep the alternative scene alive to an extent. They help underground bands with media coverage and support. These papers are the medium of communication between the community and the underground bands. Maybe if it wasn't for tiny little newspapers like the Reflector, Jane Siberry might not have gotten as far as she has (just a speculation). I just wanted to inform your readers that they should be lucky that there are free papers to read for information. Keep up the good work and continue putting out creative issues of Disorder.

Thank you,
Nikol Mikus

THE CRAMPS

ARE THE BEST FUCKING BAND IN THE WORLD

WITH YOUR HOST NARDUAR THE HUMAN SERVIETTE

By phone from Marseilles France:

Who are the Cramps?
 Nick Knox, Poison Ivy, Candy Del Mar, and Lux Interior.
 What is the bands' average age?
 The line goes dead.

By phone from L.A.:

Hey Ivy, remember I was trying to talk to ya before?
 Ya, I called you from Marseilles and I was just getting a bunch of noise. I couldn't hear your voice, only a very loud screaming squeak!

Now that you are back from your European tour where are you now?
 In Los Angeles.

Have the Cramps ever been to Vancouver before?
 Oh yeah, lots of times.

When was your first time here?
 Oh boy, let me think, it was probably '81 or '82. Ya, the first time in Vancouver we played the Commodore Ballroom. One of the things I remember is the guy brought me a... the guitar I'd been playing was a Lewis which was a Canadian make and I'd never seen another one. I found an ad for another one when I was in Vancouver and this guy carried the guitar down to the gig to show it to me, and I bought it.

So you have a piece of a Vancouver instrument then?
 I do. My Lewis; it's a great guitar. It's what I played "Surfin' Dead" on.

You've covered a few old ancient rockabilly tunes and stuff like that. Do any old fat rockabilly guys come up to you and get mad that perhaps you're "borrowing" their tunes?

No, I've never had anybody be mad. I don't think what we do should provoke them to be mad, 'cause we are honoring them. We've met some rockabilly guys from what we do. We've met Sleepy La Beef. We've met Ursel Hickey and there's a lot more I'd like to meet.

But they've never been upset that you took their song or played it in concert or anything like that. Like Hazil Adkins?
 No, they should be honored that we covered their songs and credit them. I can't imagine why somebody would be mad about something like that. They would have to be out of their minds. The only thing I heard about someone being mad was Rufus Thomas because "Can Your Pussy Do The Dog?" is inspired by his song "Can your Monkey do the Dog?" and I think he didn't like the obscene way that we rolled "the Dog."

How did ya find the song "The Crusher" by '60s burn-outs the Novas?
 We got it off a compilation album that we had found in England, while we were at Miss Cogland's (I.R.S. founder and Stewart's brother) house. We were staying there 'cause we were going to be playing at the Lyceum in London.

We bought the record in the afternoon, went home and played it on his record player, and decided to play it that night at the Lyceum. Everybody figured out it was pretty close to "Drug Train" so that we already kind of knew it, and that's the first time we did it, the same day we bought the record.

Are there many Cramps bootleg around?
 Seems like about a hundred.

Does the sight of one cause anger to run rampant through your body?

Well, to some degree because they exploit our fans. They're usually horrible quality, they cost $30 and up, and they're packaged in a deliberately misleading way. A lot of our fans want to own every song we ever covered, so what the bootleggers will do is re-title them. They'll give a new title to a previous song of ours. They'll call "Psychotic Reaction," "A Walk Down Broadway" or they'll call "Bacon Fat." "Big and Fat" and these are all deliberate attempts to suck money off our fans.

Have you had any interesting opening acts lately?

Yeah, the show we just did at the Town and Country in London was great. There was a band called Ug and the Caveman who dress up like cavemen, barefoot with leopard skin print things, and do all, like, cavemen songs. They do "Go Gorilla," "Be a Caveman," all these covers, caveman things.

This incredible Elvis impersonator, that was a Vegas guy who's living in England. I guess it's a tax problem or something. That was a good opening act.

How did the Cramps all meet? Were you, like, in a record store and were you, like, both looking at a rare Hazil Adkins single, and both trying to grab it at the same time?

No. Actually, when we met Candy Del Mar, we were trying to grab a parking spot at the same time. We were in a parking lot at a liquor store, and they didn't have enough parking spots for the store, and we were both kind of challenging each other for the parking spot. And then she recognized me and Lux and that's how we met.

Nick, we've known forever, it seems. We were introduced to him from a friend of ours from Cleveland who knew Nick and knew we needed a drummer.

Wasn't Nick in a band called the Electric Eels?

Yeah, he was in the Electric Eels, and this guy Bradley, who's dead now, introduced us to him.

Didn't Nick's brother also once play in the Cramps?
 His cousin Ike did.

That was after Brian Gregory left? Oh, way after. That was after Kid for awhile, and then we had another guy playing, Click Mort, and then Ike played with us again for a tour. He was just helping us out kind of as a favour 'cause we didn't have anyone to tour with.

What other guitarists have the Cramps churned out since Kid Congo?

Ike Knox, Click Mort... We've had various people hired, like Fur, who played with us for two months. Actually, before Kid was a girl called Julian Grindsnatch and she's in the "Urgh" movie with us.

Were you and Lux from Cleveland originally? No, Lux is from Akron and Nick is from Cleveland.

And what about yourself, Poison Ivy? Umh, I'm from... many places, mainly... I was in Sacramento when I met Lux hitchhiking.

Then did you just decide to form a band right off the bat? No, we didn't do that for a while. We were just pretty much interested in each other.

Did the New York Dolls, in any way, inspire Lux and yourself to get a band together? Are they a big influence on the Cramps?

Oh huge. We love the Dolls. We saw them a bunch of times, and I think that was really the final band that made the Cramps form. I think that was one of the best bands there ever was.

What do you think of what Buster Poindexter is doing now? If he's happy what he's doing, I guess he's earned it from having been in the Dolls. I'm certainly not interested in that particular thing that he's doing now. But he is David Johansen, and the Dolls really did something special, something magic.

Who did the Cramps play their first gig with?

The first real gig we did was with Suicide, a band out of New York that used to play pretty frequently in the late '70s. We were kind of a regular co-bill with Suicide; they'd headline and we'd open for them. We also played with the Ramones a lot in New York.

You guys were featured in that video "Live at Knappa State Mental Hospital." Was that a real show? Ya, it was.

How did that get arranged? I dunno, I think at that time it was Howie Klein or somebody in San Francisco that set that up. We just showed up and played. It was a real gig.

An incredible show it was, featuring a lot of Brian Gregory on guitar. Where is he nowadays? Is he still around L.A. or Hollywood? No, not at all. We haven't kept in touch for about ten years. We're not friends.

Was he a bad boy to the Cramps? We're not friends.

A few years ago you recorded "Songs the Lord Taught Us" at Sam C. Phillips' Studio. Is he still alive? He certainly is. He's alive and very kicking, very youthful, young. I think he's a vampire, 'cause he looks younger now than he did in the '50s.

Where was "Stay Sick" recorded? We laid the tracks down at a studio called Music Grinder in Hollywood, which is a great studio. It has this huge room, I think it used to be a brewery or some kind of factory. It just looks almost like an aircraft hanger; it's all wood and concrete. We mixed at a studio called Record One, which is a studio owned by Ocean Way, which is really the best studio in Hollywood, in L.A., maybe in the world.

This time, you, Poison Ivy, produced the Cramps? I really have on all, to some degree, you know. But it was just kind of meaningless to keep saying the Cramps, 'cause I was producing them.

Have any other artists requested your production? We've produced friends of ours from back East, the Mad Daddys, a drug up from New Jersey, and another New Jersey group called the Sickids.

Are the Sickids still around? No, they're not. There's a group now called Pink Slip Daddy with some of the members, and I think they just came out with a new release.

What about Enigma Records, are they treating the Cramps a bunch of times? Hopefully they are paying for this phone call, right? We have an unusual deal, even a lot of major artists don't have the kind of deal we do. They've given us complete artistic freedom, and not only at our request, but they really want us to have it. I think they really feel we've proven something by now, so it's a nice position to be in. I mean they really are getting behind us, us doing what we do. They're not trying to change us. They seem to be taking us quite seriously, and appreciate it.

Hallucinogens? Have they ever played a part in the Cramps act? I suppose that's just one of our many influences. I mean, we've all done them, so you can't turn back on that. There's no going backwards there. So that's definitely an influence.

Poison Ivy, what is your favorite Poison? Oh my...

C'mon you know the answer. No, I don't.

It's one of your records. Well, no... Strychnine! Only in moments of supreme faith. Actually, we just came from Spain and we were really hoping, but we didn't have time, to find some absinthe there, 'cause it's something that's very hard to get except in Spain and parts of Europe. I've never tried it, so I was kind of intrigued by that.

Who is Kurt Perkhiser? I don't know.

Who is Chris Wallace? I dunno. I don't want to answer those questions, they're rude.

Reading is fun and healthy. Do you have any fantasies that you, like, browse through?

I liked the one... I think it's done now, "Sleazoid Express" was a good one. I also like the little magazine that Hollywood Book and Poster puts out. What about "Kicks Magazine"? That one is a little too anthropological, kind of like from the Margaret Mead point of view of "Look what I dug up." They're not like the people they write about.

Don't you have some association in the shady past, dear Ivy, with Miriam from "Kicks Magazine"?

She was a drummer, briefly, in the Cramps, a long time ago. At that particular time she disliked rockabilly. She didn't like the music that we make, or she was putting it down all the time. All she liked was the Dictators and various new bands. Now she writes about rockabilly and says she loves it, so beats me.

One evening in Hollywood do you go out and groove to the scene, and check out new bands at all? Not very much. We mainly kind of have our own little world here at home. We go out once in a while, but basically keep to ourselves.

What about Hollywood's favourite children, Redd Kross; are they sort of the bastard heavy metal sons of the Cramps? They're good. I dunno if they are any of those things, but they're a fun band and I dig watching them.

And Mick Jagger and Ray Davies, have you ever met those two L.A. laves? No, I haven't.

Do you ever express a desire to? No, not particularly. I certainly admire Ray Davies a lot, but I almost don't feel a need to meet people I really admire.

Maybe I'm shy.

Are there any movie or TV appearances coming up for the Cramps in the future. Yeah, actually today! We're doing a TV thing today for a show called "After Hours." And we do a lot of television in Europe.

Who do you think is the Cramps' biggest critic?

I have no idea. I'm not sure that we would pay that much attention to the Cramps' biggest critic.

What is the most mis-matched gig the Cramps have ever played. Like you guys playing with Depeche Mode or New Order? Umh, probably a show we did in Dallas Texas once, at some small club. We were sandwiched in between two bands that both were, like, huge guys with beards. We were the middle bill, and the opening act and the headline act did Jimi Hendrix songs and Doobie Brothers songs. And we were in the middle of that in Texas, and we were not welcome there... that was kind of frightening.

I was wondering Ivy, do you think that John F. Kennedy possibly was murdered by Richard Nixon and CIA? Boy, I don't know anything about that. I'm afraid that's not one of my big departments.

American politics? Ya, I don't think I'm too authoritative on that one way or another.

What about Canadian politics? I know even less.

Do you know who the Prime Minister of Canada is? No, I don't.

Thanks for your time, Poison Ivy, see ya in Vancouver! Bye.

Backstage at the heavily securitized Commodore Ballroom April 12th:

After a mind-boggling Cramps show in which the band played every single tune off "Stay Sick", complemented by old standards like "Primitive," "Mystery Plane," "Tear It Up," "Psychotic Reaction" and "You've Got Good Taste," I managed to lasso Lux into answering a few Crampian questions. Yes, Lux Interior, the lead singer who earlier in the evening had sweated up a storm, punked out, fondled his leather "uniform" and even rolled around in mock sexual positions with a very willing, plasticized Vancouver human Barbie-doll.

Lux, when did ya first start to sing and yell, and become a crazy rock 'n' roller?

Well, when I was very young my brother used to play "You're Gonna Hear" on the piano and I remember that was the first song I sang. "St. Louis Blues," was another song I sang, just at home with my brother playing piano, and then I sang "Hey Jiji!" with a band called the Perpetual Dawnport... and that's all I remember before the Cramps.

Do you think you need a bit of training to do vocals? No, you need training if you're gonna be a crooner.

So you did have training? No, I didn't have any training.

How about Ivy, did she get much rock 'n' rolling guitar lessons before she started?

No, she's really smart. She just learned it by listening to records.

What was your first studio attempt? I was looking at a song on the record "Rockabye Psychosis and the Garage Discos." No, she's really smart. She just learned it by listening to records. No, that was the second time we were in the studio, and that was when we recorded "Gravest Hits." But the song you're referring to, "Red Headed Women," was a much better recording when we recorded it. Later on Jim Dickinson added synthesizer to it and all kinds of little funny noises. I don't like that version very much. The original version is just the four of us and him playing piano, and him singing, and that's good. But I don't like that synthesizer shit!

Why did you move to L.A. The Great Hollywood?

'Cause I love L.A. It's a real great city. Outside of Spain, I wouldn't think of any place else I'd like to live these days. Except I do like Vancouver. Vancouver's awful nice, except I don't know much more about it, except what ya see when you're here for a couple of days.

Yvonne De Carlo is from Vancouver. I know that.

And Erol Flynn died in the British Properties of a cocaine overdose with his fifteen year old lover.

I have a great movie of him and his fifteen year old lover called "Cuban Rebel Girls." It's pretty boring but that girl is a real knockout.

Did Brian Gregory... I don't answer any questions about him.

What movies have the Cramps been featured in? Uh, none that I'd care to say anything about. We've been in some movies but we'd rather make our own movie.

"Near Dark"? Yeah, that was a good movie. I like that. That's the way vampires should really be. They're all Hell's Angels really. All vampires today are Hell's Angels.

Here's an appropriate question, Lux Interior. Do the Cramps give many interviews? Well, I dunno....

Because I want the scoop. I want the Cramps scoop. Like, everyone around town is doing Cramps articles, can you give me the Cramps scoop. Like a one liner, give me please, Lux! Don't make 'em work for it. There's no Cramps scoop.

T — H — E TOWN PUMP

66 Water Street Gastown 683-6695

An interview with Phranc
by Andrea Lupini and Peter Lasrychke

hearing Phranc live, either in concert or in conversation, is a different experience to listening to her records. She is a story-telling folk singer, and as such, she works best in intimate live situations. Whilst her billing as a "Lesbian Jewish feminist with a severe flatcap and combat boots" leads to expectations of an angry, confrontational performance, in reality she is open, honest and yes, frank, but into communication rather than confrontation. We talked to Phranc when she was last in Vancouver in January, before her show at the Town Pump.

Are your audiences getting bigger? Yeah. Well, after two years of opening for other people and trying to win them over into my audience most of the time, I have a pretty good mix, which is my favorite - just to have a very eclectic mishmash of all kinds of people.

You opened for The Smiths, that audience would be quite different from your usual audience.

Well, now people are coming to shows where I'm headlining and saying, "I saw you at The Smiths." I think it's really important to play for all different audiences - making myself available and accessible to go out on tour and support other acts. It's often really a challenge for me to win over someone's audience, but it only benefits me to try and build my audience and expand my audience to include everyone.

Do you still get nervous before you perform?

I always get nervous but I've come a long way. Years ago I used to get nervous when I woke up on the morning of a show. I'd look at my clock and go, "Ten hours 'til soundcheck!" It was just hell! But the minute I'm on stage I'm okay. It all goes away, I'm comfortable.

Who do you listen to?

I listen to Van Morrison, They Might Be Giants. I'm a big fan of k.d.'s. When I'm in my car I listen to top forty country radio. I like it because there's a lot of humor.

Do you listen to any children's artists?

I like Raffi a lot. I'd like to do a kid's record one day, or do a little tour of kids' bookstores or something.

When you write a song like "Blood-death," where do you start from?

Emotion. That song comes from feeling helpless and angry. Because when I think it or not, it doesn't really matter that I'm a woman, that I'm lesbian, that I'm treated as a minority. I live in a country that does nothing to help the black people in South Africa, and I'm white, so I'm the oppressor. I'm part of the problem, what can I do to be part of the solution?

Do you see yourself as someone with a political agenda, who just happens to start singing?

No, I'm a folk singer. I write songs that tell stories. That's the music I grew up listening to, the records that my folks had when I was a kid. The music was always very simple, and really a vehicle for the lyrics and my music is really very simple. I'm not a fancy guitarist, it's really a vehicle for the lyrics. I feel very comfortable with the folk format and the ballad. I think it's an excellent way to communicate and to tell stories.

What do you think of the current popularity of folk music? You took a swipe at the image in your song "Folk Singer." What do you think of Tracy Chapman? I think she does a good job. I think she's a positive example for young women. I think there's a lot of music out there that's very good and very sincere and there are always those people that I've gonna jump on the bus/wagon. After doing what I've been doing for so long, wanting a folk thing to happen for so long, just when I had given up all hope, all of a sudden it's the fact. I take a poke at myself in that song too, because my first album was called "Folk Singer." That came out in '85, before the term had struck, and it was very difficult to be sitting there not being able to get a record out, so not taking me seriously, and all of a sudden Wow! it's the folk music revival! Everybody wants to be a folk singer.

How important is it to you to advertise yourself as a "Lesbian Folk Singer"?

I don't feel that I advertise myself. I feel that I let people know that I identify. My music isn't exclusively for lesbians, most of it has nothing to do with my sexuality. My sexuality is not a bigger part of me than that song seriously? I mean, you'd have to be pretty un-conscious to swallow that one whole. There's a lot of humor in my voice. Even though I'm singing the original lyrics, you can tell I'm cracking up when I'm singing. I do it as a consciousness-raising number. They play "I Enjoy Being a Girl" on Muzak a lot, too. It's a very popular show tune of the '50s. Doris Day did it and Pat Suzuki.

How did the album cover come about?

I really wanted to do a spoof on all these teen idol covers. Those gorgeous covers of the late '50s and '60s, which were so beautiful and I just thought it would be a lot of fun since the first record was so stark, so black and white.

In your song "Take Off Your Swastika" you criticize people who wear swastika as fashion accessories. The Cult recently got into trouble in the UK because racism and homophobia aren't things that disappear. The song is still very contemporary, and it's sad.

You're Jewish, and you're making commentary a lot on sexual politics. What's your standpoint on Middle East politics?

I don't think either party is right. I think Israel is wrong a lot of the time. I've been working on a song about this. I grew up in a nice, white, middle class Jewish family, where they sell Israeli bonds at temple on the high holidays, Israel is the promised land, the land of milk and honey - Israel can do no wrong. Israel was perfected in my mind. It's the way I grew up and I swallowed it whole.

It wasn't until not very long ago I had a political discussion with a friend, and they said, "How can you be so blind?" I said "What do you mean? I'm a Jew, Israel is it." Then I had my eyes opened up to the situation - fighting and killing each other over a piece of land.

And when I was at the Vancouver Folk Festival I met a woman there, a yiddish folk singer, an Auschwitz survivor, and she lived in Israel for fifteen years and she moved back to East Germany because she couldn't live in a country where the Israelis did to the Palestinians what the Germans did to the Jews. That just hit me. That was really, really powerful.

What does being Jewish mean to you?

It's a sense of family, and tradition, that I love. I don't focus on how misogynistic the Jewish religion can be, or all the places where women are excluded in Judaism.

Often lesbian women talk of alienation from the family because of the choices they made. You talk of love and support. It can't have been easy for your family to accept the choices that you made.

It's been a long time. I've been out for fifteen years as a lesbian. I came out when I was seventeen, moved out of the house because I couldn't be a lesbian in their home. I spent a lot of time and a lot of energy communicating with my family, and through a lot of work on both our parts I'm very close to my family today. But it did not come easily and it didn't happen overnight.

I've redeveloped my relationship with my grandfather in the past two years. My grandmother would always take me aside and I could always identify with her when no one else would have anything to do with me. She was always there.

Since my grandmother died it's been very difficult (for my grandfather), and I found myself just being there all the time, being very involved with the funeral, being close with my family and being with my grandfather. My grandfather had been sick for a long time, and last I saw my grandfather took me aside and put his arms around me, gave me a kiss and he said "Sorry." My grandfather is not a man who apologizes and will never admit that he's wrong. He said that he loved me. I still get choked up thinking about it. We've become very close and he's proud of me now.

You're optimism is impressive. Is it because you have a reference point to time when things were worse? I'm not happy (about the state of the world), and I'm angry, and I feel frustrated, and I feel small, and the world can't change fast enough for me. But I've learned, I think, to challenge it. I'm just as angry but it doesn't always work when I'm communicating to that anger. It's easier and more effective to channel my anger in maybe different ways, add more humor, deal with issues in a way that doesn't hit people over the head, in a way that lets them open up, think about an issue without showing the issue in their face. It's hard not to [show the issue in their face] sometimes.

my hair or my shoes. You can see my hair or my shoes.

When I was growing up, there were very few lesbians that were out, and I thought I was the only one. So I've made a commitment to just be out. I feel good about who I am. I have received a lot of support from the women's community and I've made it my job to go out in that big world and just be who I am, come out as a lesbian.

I think young people should have a chance to grow up and be whoever they are, whether they're heterosexual or gay or lesbian, and know that they can have happy and productive lives. It's frustrating to me that most of the time the media chooses to focus on my sexuality more than my music. And that's the price I'm paying.

You sing "I Enjoy Being a Girl" almost completely straight. The humor comes in because we know who's singing it. How would you feel if that song started getting airplay without the commentary - does it worry you? No, because I think in this day and age who can take Billy Duffy wore a swastika T-shirt on national TV and Ian Ashbury has stated that he enjoys "Nazi chic." Does this depress you, given the huge popularity of The Cult amongst young audiences?

Saying that it's acceptable in a fashion sense is being completely ignorant of the historical symbolism of the swastika. They're not stupid people, they're very smart people, and it's very irresponsible. That's what's difficult to swallow - if you're a performer in public, with a lot of younger audiences, you know people look up to you and there's a lot of Cult fans who are gonna get [swastika] T-shirts so that they can be cool.

When I was in punk bands in LA, which is when I wrote the song from direct personal experience, I had people all around me wearing swastikas 'cause it made the old people in the street mad, 'cause it pissed their parents off; they got a reaction - I think it gave them a sense of power. These weren't stupid people either. The song was written in rage. Being a Jew, being a lesbian, the swastika to me is a symbol of absolute oppression and death. When I perform this song I talk about how fascism and anti-semitism and

"It seems to be some sort of neoclassical thing again and music at the moment is now at the point where it's trying to justify itself."

by Lloyd Uliana
Join the Rhythm of Machines, Fridays 12:30-4:00 AM

"A machine... the definition of a machine is a very broad one. Anyone who has used a spade is using a machine and to criticize shovelling snow as being less fluid and artistic because the person didn't get down and use their hands is a sort of spurious criticism. To extend that a long way, I'm using a very basic connection here, but the machine is simply a tool. It's just an extension of your arm. It's an extension of your brain.

If you really want to look at the whole position, you can say that your body is a machine that is run by your mind or your soul or whatever. It's very much about where you see yourself and your work starting and ending. I see myself starting with ideas and the ideas of other people I work with and going through a whole lot of machines. Not only the synthesizers and stuff, but the people you work with and yourself form a sort of machine; and the tour you might be on is a machine.

The whole process of music is a sort of machine and I don't see that these machines are different except their usage is very poxy. People who use synthesizers don't often try and get to know each machine very well. They just acquire more of them, which is crazy! Completely crazy! That's why you get so much nothing music around."

Tom Ellard is Severed Heads. A seemingly permanent fixture on dance music charts in recent years with such singles as "Big Car," "All Saints' Day," "Greater Reward," "Hot With Fleas," et cetera, Ellard is responding to an accusation that the use of synthesizers (i.e. machines) carries with it a lack of spontaneity and instinct. Ellard and video-originator/mixer/cohort Stephen Jones opened their Rotund For Success Tour (with MC 900 FT Jesus) in Vancouver in early March. Lloyd Uliana met up with Sydney, Australia's Tom Ellard.

12 DISORDER

Ellard: It's an ignorant question in a lot of ways. A lot of people say, "Why don't you sound like Bruce Springsteen?," you know, big and rocky. You have to point out that Bruce Springsteen's music is done with drum machines and synthesizers. Springsteen uses the same sequencing packages as I used to do in my music. He produces his stuff. I produce my stuff. There's nothing really to justify.

What it is is a vague way of attacking the music that's done. It's a way of stepping back and saying, "I don't want to really criticize your music, so let's pretend that I'm talking about your equipment but what I'm really criticizing is the sort of music you do." So what you have to do is cut that out of the way and say, "Let's just get down to it. You don't like what I do, fine."

Discorder: It's clear with your newer material, particularly "Rotund For Success," that you've completely abandoned the synops, noise collages, and other experimentation that make up your first three albums ("Since the Accident," "Dead Eyes Opened," "Blubberknife" and appear occasionally on "Come Visit the Big Bigot" and "Bad Mood Guy." Do you have any intentions of ever pursuing that style again?

E: Yes, yes. That stuff is still being recorded. The band is a very large band. There's only two people who actually stick their mugs on the covers (Ellard and Jones), but there are a lot of people who pick and choose the stuff including the people who I work with at Volition Records (Australia). I record a lot of stuff and then we sit around and work on what's going to turn up under the banner. The conditions are that it has to have been the sort of stuff that we're putting out now. But there's certainly other material that can be used.

The reasons for the change are reasonable. Number one, experimentation for experimentation purposes is a wank. You experiment to find the things that you find personally satisfying and then you explore them.

I am personally satisfied with the sort of nuances that I'm working with now on "Rotund For Success." On earlier records I really feel like there's a hand pointing down and going, "Hey, this is wacky, this is interesting, wow, they're using this technique. It's very futurist, wow, I haven't heard anything like that." That's fine for a while, but if you keep on doing that you're a wanker. Those little hands have to be swept away.

Every little sound on "Rotund For Success" has actually got just as much work and detail input into it but it's not with neon signs all over it. Rotund has a lot of really strange ways of coming about sounds, but we're not advertising it anymore.

D: "Big Car" sounds really philosophical ("Here are sights I may not see / Shine a light on me / Here are paths I may not tread / Shine a light on me") What's it all about?

E: None of the songs are about anything particularly specific. When you disguise real world situations, they sound philosophical. That's all philosophy is, anyway; taking a problem in the real world and turning it into generalities.

A lot of the songs I'm writing at the moment just tend to be about what you'd really like to be doing with your life and the reality of it. Life is so short and you really should be just going for it, but you just don't get around to it. Then you wake up and you're old. "Big Car" and "Greater Reward" and all these songs aren't all about this, but they do tend to relate to the difference between reality and what it could be and that's a big preoccupation, I suppose, on my part.

D: It's hip to dance again and the corporate labels see dance music as some sort of saviour. Where do you see it heading in the '90s?

E: What's going on at the moment is some folk music revival. That's what the majors are playing at anyway. The majors have found folk music as some sort of saving mechanism which means they don't have to support dance music. Dance music was the thing that was going to keep them going, but it's tricky and cantankerous, whereas folk music you can get everyone into it from six years old to sixty years old.

SEVERED HEADS

I think dance music is going to become more and more of a ghetto. I don't have much confidence in it. Obviously some people could come along and correct me quite wisely in that respect. There's so much stuff which is just like turning on a drum machine and away you go. There's quite a legitimate concern: "Why am I buying this stuff... fuck it all off!"

There is good stuff going on in dance music, but it's going down the google hole with all the bad stuff. It's like the indie punk stuff of the late '70s. There was lots of really nice singles around then, but there was just so much schlock that after a while you just didn't feel like buying it anymore. All these sorts of poxy bands that came along at the end of it.

D: It just seems that the line between what is considered underground dance music and what is mainstream dance music is disintegrating. For instance, not in this country, but certainly in the US, support for the Severed Heads has allowed for crossover into the Billboard charts.

E: Yes, but crossing over into Billboard doesn't really signify all that much. It means more within the industry than it does to the average listener. As far as the average listener is concerned, we don't exist. For our fans, I suppose they just see that we've softened and with the softness has come more attention. We have softened in a way, but that's only part of it. That's the ice cream on top of the rock.

Music...you start off with constraints and the constraints become less and less and then it becomes options and then it gets to a point where it's almost mandatory to be as grotesque and overbearing as possible. You've seen it in painting, where you've gone from very studied portraiture over to all sorts of bullshit, basically. People just started throwing paint at a canvas and saying, "There you go." Then they've tried to justify that by saying the act of throwing the paint has a legitimacy. Then people started calling the bluff and it is just garbage. It seems to be some sort of neoclassical thing again and music at the moment is now at the point where it's trying to justify itself.

D: It's "At the Movies" time. I'm going to bark out a band name and have you reply with some opinions on them, alright?

First off, Depeche Mode.

E: They write great singles and their albums are terrible. The albums are really stodgy but the singles are quite nice. They write nice pop songs. By all accounts they go on about world peace and love, but basically, they're just rock and roll attitude. "Save the trees, chicks after the show."

I think Daniel Miller, the producer, is the real star of that particu-Nitzer Ebb. Nitzer Ebb don't seem to have much of a sense of humour to them.

D: Midnight Oil.

E: There's two aspects to Midnight Oil. Aspect number one is the songs which again, I find really dull. It's like "Johnny B. Goode" and variations on that sort of sound with a couple of English producers thrown in.

"That's all philosophy is, anyway; taking a problem in the real world and turning it into generalities."

lar exploit. It's particularly more pleasant than most music, so thumbs up to Depeche Mode.

D: Einsturzende Neubauten.

E: I just find the whole sort of thing dull. In Australia there's this joke; it goes, "I've got spiders crawling up my anus." Cause there was this band who thought they were Neubauten and this line came along: "I've got spiders crawling up my anus!" Everyone just laughed and left. They're a "spiders crawling up my anus" band... bash-bash-bash-aagh! bash-bash-bash-aagh! It's fine, but I'm not interested at all.

D: Nitzer Ebb.

E: I just find there's something missing. Half a record. The record I have should have been done at two levels. You could buy the CD and there should have been another CD with all the melodies that you could play along with it. It's really DAF all over again.

DAF were sort of kitschy and that was nice. They had that big sort of brutal guy - "Roar! Roar!" - and they get the little girlie singing and stuff. That was more funny than

And then there's the political aspect of it. A Midnight Oil concert is basically the big bald guy up on stage going "Fuck the Americans" and everyone in the audience going "Fuck the Americans" like "Sieg heil, sieg heil." It's like a political right wing rally with all these bald guys in the audience and the bald guy on stage. The words are good but the way they are forced makes it sloganeering.

If you've got space in a newspaper you've got media access for one reason and they exploit it for other reasons. Not so much Midnight Oil because I do believe that Peter Garrett in his political activities in Australia has earned some respect for his thinking.

But there's this band that did a Vietnam veteran's song and they got their half page in the entertainment section. It was all about a Royal Commission that was going on for the Vietnam veterans. And they're saying, "It's all lies. The vets are right. The government's lying. Blah blah." The commission hadn't finished. None of the findings had come out and yet here was some bunch of dildoes coming on saying, "We know. We're a band, we know." And they're getting media space. That sort of thing's just got to be stomped on like cockroaches.

SEYMOUR

A ROOTIN' TOOTIN'

HOOTENANNY

Same Old Thing Again?

March 22nd, 1990, a day that will go down as one of the worst days in the history of Canadian radio. For it was on that day that the final episode of Hootenanny Saturday Night aired on C1TR.

HSN, or Hootenanny, or simply "the Hoot," as it was called by its most faithful listeners, was not merely a radio show. It was a Canadian institution. What names from the past forty-six years are more familiar to Canadian children of all ages than: the Hilarious Bill, the Hilarious Scott, Valerie, and, of course, Valerie's imaginary friend, "Willy-yum"? They are as much a part of the Canadian experience as the Friendly Giant, Mr. Dressup and Front Page Challenge. In a sense, the Hoot crew are yet more than these others. They didn't alter their personalities to become a gregarious mutant with a rooster, a giraffe and a chair to curl up in, or a chameleon clown with a tickle trunk and two bogus puppets in a tree. Nor did they talk about the current events of the '30s. They were real, they were themselves. They had each other... and shitloads (literally) of fifty cent records.

Of course there were gimmicks — the Backwards Song, the Listeners' Choice, the Deja Voodoo station I.D., Love Battery's "Between the Eyes," and that Mel Brewer "whaling songs" thing. But they were part of the tradition; it wouldn't have been Hootenanny without 'em.

HSN was educational, not only in terms of music and the lives of its stars, but about the world around us. Where else could you learn where to get a throw rug made entirely from Safeway bags? Or that when you donate blood, you're giving all the blood in your head? We also learned (and heard) that Tolly Savalas is more than just a talented actor. He's a poet and a gifted singer.

Over the years, we got to know each member of the Hootenanny family quite well. We learned of Bill's one time romance with Scott's three-headed sister, and of Valerie's on again off again affair with Loverboy vocalist Mike Renofsky. While the music played we could ponder a past, present or future liaison between Bill and Val. But don't forget Scott and his catchphrase, "Nah, I got nuthin' to say."

Between the witty banter of "Bill and Scott," as they were affectionately known, and their kooky post-punk guitar grunge music, there was... that gal, that voice. The one they would turn to when something puzzled them: "Let's Ask Valerie." Sure, Valerie usually told them what they'd be asking and often laughed at her own jokes. It didn't matter. We listened intently to tales of her upbringing in that Irish neighbourhood in Australia, of her war exploits, her London theatre career, and her Arctic and Amazon adventures. We were instructed on how to support the local band scene. We discovered her favourite TV show, most memorable Halloween parties, and that cash is the perfect Christmas gift. We also heard of "assholes at Shenanigans" dirty dancing on New Year's Eve, and of the time they all got White Spot burgers and forgot to eat them. Hey, we even got dating tips and a guide to bondage.

After fifteen years, Valerie finally got her own theme song. Of course, the Monkees were commissioned and after spending a few weeks with the vivacious hunk of femininity (which was especially intense for drummer Micky Dolenz), the boys came up with her trademark tune, well-known and loved.

It was about this time that the Let's Ask Valerie Army (LAVA) appeared on the scene which signalled the beginning of the end. Bill and Scott's jealousy of a 5-10 minute segment during their 4 1/2 hour show (with a fan club 15 000 strong) became too great a strain. They started messing with drugs again, but this time, without the "don't try this at home, kids" warnings. They began bickering in front of stunned studio audiences. The familiar HSN slogans of "Working together to keep BC strong" and "Beating swords into plowshares" were officially changed to "So What?," "Who Cares?," and "Get your own damn radio show, pal."

Scott failed to show up, claiming he had to "work late at the sweatshop." Bill countered by saying that he had to "sweat late at the workshop." Yet all of us knew where they really got their money...

With this new attitude came the final degradation of being forced to move to a late Thursday slot, thus losing their large pre-teen audience. To add insult to injury, they were prohibited from changing the show's name.

And the rest, as they say, is history. Before ALL the sponsors bailed out and the brass upstairs pulled the plug, they called it quits themselves. After just a few months in the barren wasteland of Thursday night. During the final moments of the final show, running overtime as usual, and amidst drunken nearly-incoherent slurs against the station they once lovingly referred to as "The Big Mama," they were kicked off the air by a certain "Randy." The man whose name all Hoot fans have grown to hate.

So together our heroes and their heroin(e) absconded to a strange land. At each other's throats, they are out there even now, maybe in the Arizona desert. Bill looking for a truck stop, Scott looking for a decent motel, and Valerie looking for her comb. Perhaps we'll hear about the rest of their American Odyssey on the air one day. But until then, they'll live in our hearts, minds, and tape decks, forever.

As Bogie almost once said, "Here's listening to you, kids." Now we can all lighten up our trenchcoats, pull down our fedoras, light those cigarettes and walk into the misty night with these words on our lips:

"We'll have a Hootenanny, Hootenanny Saturday night, And if you think we'll be rowdy, you're right!"

"I don't care about what somebody says. Like they say, I'm controversial."

Hollywood, California 1990: After 3 days of driving up and down the Pacific coast highway, here I sit dizzily watching a tacky, live-stage version of the Conan story.

"Wow!" my lady friend exclaims as she watches in amazement.

"God, that's entertainment," I say. "But they haven't got it right. Conan should have a lot more muscles and Sonja should have a much larger chest — actually, they both should have much larger chests."

"Shhhh!" she says as the hippie wimp-style flat-chested Conan steps up and grabs a sword sticking out of the stage floor which causes him to be engulfed in an horrendous amount of smoke and lasers. A shadowy figure emerges from the smoke. It is... Conan! Except that his hair has magically changed colour and his body has suddenly swollen, inflated by some strangely invoked steroid spell.

"Gawd, when is it going to end," I mutter.

"Shhh, it's okay," my lady friend says as she and at least 500 other females ogle Conan's chest and other parts of his anatomy. Victor Mature as Samson wasn't this sexy, nor as well developed. Come to think of it, neither was Gina Lollobrigida!

When the torture ends, I attempt to wash off the female hormones which I feel have drenched me. I then make my way towards the telephone. I have other kinds of chests (and hormones) on my mind.

"Where are you going?" my now seemingly unimpressively endowed lady friend asks me. "Aren't you going into the gift shop with me?"

"No." I go to the phone and dial the number.

"Hello, R.M. here."

I reintroduce myself and ask when it would be convenient to come over and interview him.

"Around six o'clock. Is that alright?"

"Yes, that will be fine."

As we leave the home of cross-dressing cartoon characters, otherwise known as the Universal Studios Tour, we come across Hollywood's rush hour traffic, which is in its usual state — a standstill. Eventually we get moving towards Russ' house.

"Who is this Russ Meyer guy anyway?" she asks.

"We are talking about one of the few people that has pretty much total control over the films he makes. He was a photographer for Playboy, then he made "The Immoral Mr. Teas," "Faster, Pussycat, Kill! Kill!," "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls," "Beneath the Valley of the Ultravixens"... I can't begin to describe what he has done!"

"Oh..."

We pull up to the front of his house.

"This is it," I mutter to myself as I pull my equipment from my car. I go up to the front door and ring the bell. After a suspenseful minute or so, he answers the door.

"Come on in. You'll have to excuse me, as I am in the middle of this basketball game."

"That's alright," I say as I study the interior of his humble abode. We sit down in his living room. My companion looks around at the multitude of press clippings, nudes of Russ' leading ladies, and foreign posters of his films. I had never in my life seen so much film memorabilia (mammorabilia?) in one area, everything carefully framed to protect it from aging.

"Are we all set?" Russ asks.

"Just about, I just have to get my levels set."

Suddenly I realise that nothing is reading. It is probably the most embarrassing moment of my life — my equipment is failing and I am struggling to get it to work.

"I'll be over here it you need me," Russ says as he gets up to watch the rest of his Lakers game.

In light of what had transpired, I check my equipment some time after the failure. Of course, it works perfectly, without plausible explanation for the earlier problem. The only thing I can suggest is perhaps the ghost of Martin Bormann, so mischievously portrayed in many of Russ Meyer's films, interfered.

Well, I am still at a loss as to what happened, but fortunately Russ later consented to do the interview by phone.

Russ Meyer's Obsession With Big Tits

Interview by Grandee Englehart

You have a dislike for Canada Customs. I was wondering why? Why, your whole structure is archaic. In censorship, in stickers that have to be on videos, particularly Russ Meyer's. It's almost run like a police state. Police can knife in, and knock over a guy's store and impound his video cassettes, the whole shebang.

Well, it's not really quite like that. I'll put it this way: I cannot release my films in Canada.

Have you tried?

Yes, we've tried to release them, and feel that there'll be no problem. It's the poorest market, short of Korea, that I have experienced.

What was the problem with the Koreans.

They're thieves.

Well in the future, would you ever consider releasing your films in Canada if the problems were cleared up?

Sure, I'd release them in Canada. We've dealt with this, my distributor and I, for too damn long, with what was her name, Mary Brown, the woman who had two-foot long feet...

You're talking about the, uh... built like a nose handle. No, no, I don't take any heart from this. I encounter your people always at trade shows. They have the same story, "Oh if we could just get your films up there." I only had one guy who had the balls, and I can't remember his name. He bought forty cassettes, but he had to have them shipped to his brother-in-law in Kentucky, then brought them across the frontier in the boot of his car. So I have a total negative attitude towards your Customs, and your customs.

Well, from my own research just before I came to meet you, I sort of agree with what you're saying, in terms of the censorship, because I found a couple of the rules in their guidelines to be very ridiculous, concerning anal sex, or the suggestion of anal sex. And I used "Beneath the Valley of the Ultravixens," as an example. And the Canada Customs guy said, "No, I'm sorry, they talk about it."

And it's best to forget it. I'm not going to lose any sleep over it. The hell with it. Occasionally a brave soul will send his money and we'll send him a cassette, and it goes. We don't send it UPS or anything, we send it regular mail, certify that it's a video cassette, and they get them. And I had one guy in B.C. that didn't get his.

Really? Sent it twice. Each time the eagle-eyed guy who looks more austere than some Sandhurst second lieutenant intercepted it.

Going on to some of your films, a friend of mine was wondering why "Faster Pussycat" was out, and "Motor Psycho" wasn't. Because I didn't feel like bringing it out. It takes time for me to master these films, video masters, and to have the time. And now I've done it, but it still isn't out. It's ready for German television. Someday it will be on video. When I'm ready, when I get rid of my book, BRM, the "Breast of Russ Meyer," and do a sufficiency of fishing, then it will come out. I just don't feel like doing it now. I have the master done, but I haven't the time to devote to distributing it. Have cassette boxes made and all that. I have more important things to do.

You've just sold some films to German television?

We don't sell them. We let them have license to show them in West Germany. They will show ten films, uncut. That's a ritualistic thing for me. If you have to cut, don't play it. I just sold one to Finland. No cuts: "Supervixens," the bathtub stomp, the dynamite up the ass, all of that. Canada though, oh. You know what we had to do when we showed "Supervixens" on screen?

No, I don't. We had to punch out the nether regions of all the girls, pubic hair, with what we would call in the United States a motorman's punch. Like they used to have on buses and streetcars. In order to transfer your ticket, you'd have to have it punched, you have a little hole made in it. So, ridiculously, I punched out all the areas that showed pubic hair. Really. It was like, watch the bouncing ball. When I saw "Supervixens" in the theatre, fortunately, as far as I remember, "cause it was part of a midnight show series, I don't remember the motorman's punch. I seem to remember the public hair remaining intact. Well, I don't know who had the print, but we had some difficulty with a schlock operator out of Montreal showing my pictures without justification. So a lot of my films have been shown in 16mm. We had a Canadian distributor who had been licensed by an American whom I am seeking to incarcerate. The Canadian distributor seems to be an alright guy, you know, submitting a lot of evidence to me where the pictures have played in 16mm.

so high - that would go to the Sloan-Kettering Institute - that he couldn't possibly afford me. I don't like Mr. Waters. I don't like his films, and I don't like what he does when he interviews you. Okay. Now, who else do we hit? When does your video come out? Of what? Of "The Breast of Russ Meyer." When I'm ready. How long do you expect it to run? I don't know, maybe a year, maybe two years, maybe five years, who knows. I've got many other things to do. Do you know what the running time of it would be?

"You have the Meyer obsession, the obsession for tits. Big tits. Meyer's obsession for satire, the send-up. Nobody makes a better Russ Meyer picture than Russ Meyer."

Oh, you couldn't handle that, no way could you handle that, there's so much pubic hair. There's even a hardcore sequence with me and Kitten Natividad. Oh no, you haven't got a chance, a ghost of a chance. It's just concentrated tits and sex, unrelenting, non-stop.

John Waters referred to it as "Berlin Undertilts," and said it would probably run around twelve hours. Fatuous man. I don't particularly care for him. He's got a lot of opinions. He offered me a job in his new movie. I was pleased to price my fee

It used to be about seventeen hours, probably four hours. I've got much work to do, much work. And I don't feel like working. You see, you've got to be hungry in the film business, to work hard, and I'm only working on the book. That's my only interest at the moment.

And when do you expect the book to come out? I don't know. I won't say any more. When it's ready. When it's ready. Yep.

And as you were telling me, it's going to be around ninety dollars. A hundred and thirty-eight fifty. A hundred and thirty-eight fifty. In two volumes. You're only doing a limited run of this book? Five thousand. Five thousand. A normal person wouldn't be able to order this through their bookstore. No, there's only a few bookstores that are buying it, because I don't give any discounts. They have to pay. The consumer would have to pay more than a hundred and thirty-eight fifty. But by and large the bookstores just want to own it.

You take a certain amount of stringent quality in the way your films look. As you were saying earlier, the transfer of the videos has to be good for videotape. I've talked with a couple of people who have worked with you on transfers and they say you're a real stickler for detail.

Quality. Quality. This goes through all of your videotapes? Yes, they're all handled the same way. They cost a great deal. "Motor Psycho," for example, cost nearly 4500 dollars, four thousand five hundred dollars US, transferred from one-inch masters. It's in a vault and it will sit there. The Germans have their master, that's all I care about.

The Germans, when are the Germans going to be showing their films?

They're going to be showing it later this year. They're going to pay roughly a million dollars to show them twice, ten features, no cuts, starting with "Mr. Teas," up through and including "Vixens," no cuts; you know, at the time that little Hans is down eating his strudel and his wurst, at eight o'clock at night, at the family hour.

Well, that's always pleasing. Let's see, how do you feel when film critics and fans attach symbolic meaning to your work?

Well, I think it's fine. Whatever they want to say, it's great; all these kinds of ideas as to what Meyer's trying to say.

Some of the more well-known film critics in North America feel that you are the only true auteur of the cinema. Russ, have you always found it difficult to give some of your creative powers to others? You have the Meyer obsession, the obsession for tits. Big tits. Meyer's obsession for satire, the send-up. Nobody makes a better Russ Meyer picture than Russ Meyer.

There used to be a little running gag through some of your films involving Martin Bormann.

Yes, regrettably, the gentleman, Henry Roland, passed on over the Great Divide. I used him because of incorporating him originally in "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls," and then I decided for him to become a running gag, as it were, in other films. I helped with his hospitalization; kept him up to snuff as far as the Screen Actor's Guild was concerned.

America to win the Pulitzer Prize, has never made any secret of the fact that he co-wrote the screenplay to your 1970 movie, "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls." We co-wrote, he and I, the treatment. Man by the name of Manny Diez did some additional writing on it because Roger had to leave after thirty days, and that's all the time he had available to us. But he essentially wrote the script, yes.

Well, he thinks that it holds up well as an exposé of Hollywood decadence. Looking back... He not only thinks, he knows. He knows. Well, looking back, did the film turn out the way you envisioned it?

Certainly. But I didn't do a film on Hollywood decadence; it's Meyer's decadence.

There's a lot of this... statement about Hollywood. It just happened that we set it here, because it was a proper place, better than in Kanarsi, y'know.

Right. Would you say that Hollywood is still the same as it was back in 1970?

Only more so. I think probably that so-called film "tycoons" are trying with even more vigour to take advantage of young frails (ed. note - '40s expression for girls) who want to come out here. Nothing has changed. It still has a very immoral kind of backyard. [Hollywood people are] very prone to take potshots at my films, but on a personal level so many people relate. [It's] what we would say, not all that nice. Do you go to other people's films? Uh, uh. I don't go to films unless they're what I call gut-pulling movies. Y'know, a lot of violence and head-bludgeonings and so forth. I saw a picture called "Impulse" the other night that Sondra Locke did. The girl that was with Eastwood. She did a marvelous job. It's a wonderful film, but it doesn't have any names, so it'll probably do its job and... What's good is that a girl did a great job. I really admired it.

Name a couple of other films that you liked. Oh, any Clint Eastwood film; I go to see him. But that's essentially it. So I guess it would be pointless to ask you if you have any directors you enjoy.

Clint Eastwood and Don Siegel, who I guess doesn't do much work anymore. Those are the people, essentially.

Okay. Out of all the women you've been involved with, I guess the most famous lady has to be your ex-wife, Edie Williams.

No, she is not the most famous, not at all. In fact, Edie does not even fit into the seven top women I have been intimate with in my life.

Who are the seven top? I wouldn't say all that to you. You can read it in the book. You have to draw conclusions, because I don't say "You are number six," or "You are number four."

Edie Williams was a girl I met at Fox. She was a starlet there; she was under contract there. It seemed like a good way to complete my repertoire would be to marry a starlet. And it seemed as though we were only married for forty-five minutes. We were actually married for four years. And she was an attractive lady, and very aggressive in the sack. When we were speaking.

"Apparently, by and large, the only films that people can enjoy over and over again are mine."

But she is the most important or the most renowned, the most significant, or the one with the best body, or anything of that nature. A fine lady, and let's leave it at that, all right?

She was just up in town a few years ago doing her act, an auto-erotic "love dance," which involved audience participation.

Ah, whatever. Russ, people that dislike your movies point to the fact that you use ordinary women, not actresses, and they can be from any profession, with the only qualification being that they have an attractive face and very large breasts. The word that I...

They're not ordinary women, they're really very special ladies. And it's always been extremely difficult to find women that would qualify. Certainly the main thing is their boobs. They've got to be big. They've got to be cantilevered. They've got to be gravity-defying. They've got to have a wasp waist, lyre-like hips; svelte, y'know. Long, attractive legs; nice face. Not ordinary ladies by any stretch of the imagination.

Well, I've heard a lot of people who've disliked your films use the word "infantile." Does that ever anger you when you hear this? No, I don't care about what somebody says. Like they say, I'm controversial.

When you do the film, you control every aspect: the writing, obviously the direction, the editing. Is there anything else that you keep your hands on?

Oh, I handle all facets of the film. I'm responsible for everything. It's my conception to begin with. I execute it, film it, edit it, create the advertising, then get out and sell it on the road. That's all past; that's years before, y'know.

Did you ever think that your films would be so long-lasting? No, I never did, and I have to ask myself, "Why are they?" I don't know. I really don't know why, but I'm pleased.

You said to me that the films would outlast the "Rambos" and the "Star Treks."

I don't think there's any doubt about that. The true test is if someone can lay down some money and purchase a cassette for themselves to look at over and over again. Apparently, by and large, the only films that people can enjoy over and over again are mine. I mean, with all this stuff about "Citizen Kane" and the "Rambo" films, whatever... You just can't look at these films over and over again. You can with a Russ Meyer film. Apparently there lies the rub, the secret. Who knows what the secret is? Maybe because they're cartoons. They're simple. You don't have to strain to hear someone saying something because everybody usually speaks in bellows. I really don't know. As I said, I'm pleased. I guess the same thing goes for a movie like "Faster Pussycat," which seems to be enjoying a lot of notoriety lately.

Well, there's talk now they may put it on the stage in England. People are approaching me on that matter. So it'll be a musical, will it? I have no idea what it will be. I don't think it'll be musical.

We're all very much looking forward to your book when you have it completed.

That won't cross the frontier, only by smuggling it in. Public hair.

It will have pictures of public hair, will it?

Yeah, there's even some full-frame close-ups of it. Looks like a brillo brush. There's a lot of nudity; there's 2300 pictures. Not any are going to be censored for the sake of the Dominion. You'll have to slip it through, y'know, also, interestingly with regards to the press and people who want review copies, there are no freebies. No freebies.

What people will have to do to what are interested to review it and so forth, they will pay what is called the wholesale price, which will be above ninety dollars at the present time. It could go even higher. And they will make out a cheque to the Sloan-Kettering Cancer Institute, which is one of my favourite charities, and that's where the money will go; for people who wish to review. They have to be certified people of the press, whether it be radio or television, or newspaper. No critic will get it for free, no way. The only person that I have promised a free copy was the vice-president of Playboy, who has agreed to do a very ambitious article on it.

There'll be about twenty people, one of which is Hugh Hefner, who has been very cooperative and helpful, and a few ladies that I care a great deal about, and some personal friends. There'll be about 22 copies given away. The rest'll be sold. So Roger Ebert will probably be... Oh, he'll get number one. He'll get number one.

They'll all get numbered. Roger will get number one.

Will you autograph these? Each one, each time someone buys a book, its value will escalate two-fold. It will be a real collector's piece.

Well, I'm certainly looking forward to it. "Motor Psycho," as we talked about earlier, is not available on video. Is there any other titles that are currently not available? Sure, there are a number of them, but even "The Handyman" will be available someday. It's been put on tape, but I have no time to do the advertising. I have a book to do, and that's more important. Someday they will come out, someday. The Federal Republic will be showing them over the television network in Germany. I guess because of the book you haven't had time to go to some of the usual hangouts, as your friend Roger goes over to Cannes every year.

No, that's not a hangout for me; I don't go to those kinds of things. I go fishing somewhere, or in search of a large breast. I don't have any hangups.

Do you search locally for large breasts, or do you...

I don't search anymore. I've got all the breasts I need, enough to complete a "Mondo Topless Too," spelled T-O-O.

Well, Russ, it's been very, very nice talking to you. Glad you got it this time; that your equipment's working. Hopefully it is. Bye.

To hear more of the wit and wisdom of Russ Meyer, listen to Moving Images, the movie and entertainment show on CTR, Friday, May 26, and Friday June 1 at 10:30 in the morning.

You can catch three of Russ Meyer's classics locally at the Vancouver East Cinema from May 18 through the 27th. Meyerfanatics can enjoy themselves with "Beneath the Valley of the Dolls," "Supervixens," and "Beneath the Valley of the Ultravixens." Fans who miss this presentation will be able to catch these same films playing at the Roxy in Victoria from June 29 through July 13.

Finding Meyer's films on video requires a diligent search of the appropriate video shops.

BE ALWAYS HAPPY WITH EXCELLENT TASTE AND FLAVOR

SPEARMINT CHEWING GUM

Hey wow. Finally unearthed that kooky blue Slurpee flavour again, at the Sev-Elev at Alma & 10th. 'Cept instead of just "Mystery Flavour?," they're calling it "Blue Raspberry," which kinda destroys the mystique a bit. But then, nor does it taste the same as it did last year, so maybe it ain't even the real thing.

On a depressing note, it seems NO Dairy Queens, not even the trusty old one back in Surrey across from my parents' place, put an extra sprinkling of the chocolate bar atop one's Blizzard anymore. Nor does the server-person masterfully flip the Blizzard upside-down before handing it to you. Is tradition, ritual, sacrosanct custom, going to Hell in a handbasket in the DQ empire?! Goddamn it, I say.

A serendipitous discovery of mine in the chewing-gum realm was made at Best Quality Produce (3100-blk. W. Broadway), where you can pick up a 5-stick pack o' Lotte gum for $2.25, or 4 packs for $9.99. "Be always happy with excellent taste and flavour," proclaim the blue wrappers of each piece. God knows I go through it at a rate that could sustain the Korean economy singlehandedly. It's that really mushy, chewy, malleable kind of gum that stays that way even after lengthy chewing. Slick.

Just up the street, the Hollywood Theatre has some highly eatworthy cookies, the saucer-sized kind, going for a dollar apiece. Crammed with both white and dark chocolate chunks and better than many I've had at the Van East. Your zits will thank you.

Remember disco-white with green lettering and yellow-and-red accents? Yes, the old Popcorn Twist package has gone the way of the dodo, supplanted by a staunch conservative royal blue dealie with tasteful red and yellow lettering. Tasteful! Yecch. The whole essence of Popcorn Twists is TRASH, damnit! Without appropriately tacky packaging, I predict the wormy little vermin will plunge into the stale depths of obscurity, dragging the whole corporation right along with 'em.

Bo-nus day at the Hastings Sev-Elev recently, whence I happened upon a 3-for-the-price-of-2 pack o' King-Dons at $98. Crinkly white plastic wrapping instead of the usual anonymous tinfoil, which destroyed some of the Star Trek quality of eating the darned things, but hey. Good value for the money anyway.

Went and checked out Olympia Oyster & Fish Co. for the first time this year a couple days ago; and yes, the food still kicks butt. (Kicks fin?...) Six and a half bucks'll get ya a heaping platter o' cod & chips with a dollop of cole-slaw and a tall cold Dad's Root Beer. And the conversations to be eavesdropped upon from an unobtrusive corner of this little joint rival any in the Only for sheer interest value. Loisa customers are greeted by name; the counters are lined with '50's greasy spoon style condiment containers; and lip-smacking chow, neighbourliness, and a lack of pretension (rare on Robson St) are the order of the day. In fact, why am I telling the outside world about it?! Robson at Thurlow. Mind-bendingly groovy fish posters too.

"BOB'S" FAVORITE COMICS
The SubGenius® Comic Book #1
Published by Rip Off Press, Inc.

In the beginning there was lack and Bob said, "Let there be slack." In the wake of such sublime sooth, a group of abnormal mortals founded a church in HIS name and called it The Church of the SubGenius. Following the slogan "You'll Pay To Know What You Really Think," HIS followers have created the ultimate religious marketing vehicle in an era of such entities. Unfortunately, the comic version of the SubGenius System® pales in comparison with the seminal documentation the Church cranked out during the previous decade.

The origins of The Church of the SubGenius are shrouded in deep mystery. What is known is sketchy and comes from dubious sources. Legend has it that Malcalypse the Younger (Kerry Thornley, a close personal friend of Lee Harvey Oswald) found a copy of the Discordian Bible (The Principia Discordia) in a bus terminal washroom in Far East, Texas on a dark and stormy night. Realizing the document to be his passport to full-breasted women and imported liquors, Malcalypse/ Thornley began to spread the word of BOB to those potentially secular beings who really needed to believe in something.... anything. Thus began the publishing history of one of the greatest written conspiracies of the modern era. Heralding the advent of the four cornerstones of this great Church — Sex, Violence, Religion, and Philosophy, the initial zealots took these words to imply complete freedom of thought and process and thus, the holy crusade to destroy the conspiracy was underway.

The SubGenius Comic Book is the divine revelation of the Reverend Ivan Stang (one of the few humans to have actually met BOB), who in the last ten years has published three books: "The Book of The SubGenius," "High Weirdness By Mail," and "3-Fisted Tales of 'Bob,'" and St. Palmer Vreedeaz, who is the design mind behind this sporadic nonsense and a well-regarded practitioner of "Primitive Victimization" and Bullbada. Together, these two rejects from the Society of Jesus have compiled concrete evidence that Oswald acted alone, that Einstein was an alien, and that Crest really does prevent cavities.

The Church itself has a long history of publishing engaging ideas and bizarre postulations such as "Jehovah is an alien and still threatens this planet." An example of their more sublime attitudes is this excerpt from the classic "Brag Of The SubGenius," which was transcribed from a cassette recording made at a seance in 1973: "Yes baby, I'm twenty-three feet tall and have thirteen rows of teeth! I am too intense to die, I'm insured for acts o' God and Satan! I'm a fission reactor, I fart plutonium, power plants are fueled by the sweat from my brow! I circumcise dinosaurs with my teeth and make them leave a tip! I pick the GOD DAMN terror of the fucking gods out of my nose before I hook out a lunger and extinguish the Sun! YEEEEEEHAW!"

This comic, their first, fails to measure up to their previous publications. Done in a traditional anthology style, "BOB'S FAVORITE COMICS" is a hard-boiled attempt to shock and amuse while reinforcing the SubGenius ideals of sensory overload and total disrespect for authority. Artists such as Jay Kinney (Co-Editor of "Gnosis") and Paul Mavrides (Co-Creator of "Anarchy Comicx") have contributed their work to this thirty-two page romp. Cutesy cartoon doggies undergo vivisection, friendly policemen turn out to be alien co-conspirators, saints turn into sodomites before your very eyes, all this and more for $3.50 (Can). What more could you ask from a comic book?

Well, more laughs per page for starters. How about less schlock and more shock; artwork that doesn't appear to have been lifted from the pages of Police Digest; less over sexism and more raw sexuality; and perhaps a pot to be won in when all that is being offered is poor performance? At its best, "BOB'S FAVORITE COMICS" is rather scathing in a middle class sort of way. At its worst, the comic bodes a hole into your head while trying desperately to laugh at itself. Deadly dull stuff indeed.

Could it be that the time of BOB is long past and all that is left of the original pataphysical premise that endeared the Church to thinkers of original thought is the moneygrubbing aspect? The Church of the SubGenius seems to be going yuppie mainstream and the effect of such a BIGTIME mindset is apparently fraying the edges of the original concept. Perhaps since the assassination of J.R. "Bob" Dobbs in 1984, the High Priests of the Church have succumbed to the forces of rampant capitalism and have begun to recruit investment bankers to their cause. This would explain the overall tone of dead metaphor that reeks like spoiled tuna on a hot summer day.

The idea of The Church of the SubGenius going mainstream is rather unsettling. Far gone cults are less sexual secrets; when cloaked in mystery the excitement is almost unbearable but when revealed to the light of day they seem rather bland and ordinary. That said, one hopes that this second issue of "BOB'S FAVORITE COMICS" is more hip and less hype. Having been a fan for over a decade I am certainly willing to let the Church have the benefit of the doubt though I will pause before I fork over my shekels if and when #2 appears at my local comic outlet.

TOWN PUMP
66 Water Street, Gastown 683-6695

This month brought me one of the largest bags of demo tapes I've ever seen - what follows is just a taste of all the good stuff that's at the station right now (call up and make a request or, better yet, go see these bands play somewhere):

Bruce A and the Secular Atavists-"By Request" "All Torn Up" Bruce et al have come a long way since I compared them to early Frank Zappa (will they ever forgive me?) in this column. While they always did have those clever, catchy lyrics (ie "Girls in the Shower," one of those rare demo tape songs to make the transition to being sung absent-mindedly by lots of people at work and so on), there was a quirkiness to their sound that might have held off some potential fans. But now it looks as though Bruce has come around to song-writing more in the tradition of what he did with the Secret Vs. Catchy guitars and impassioned vocals add to the big pop sound, and these songs have the sort of early punk-juke pop sensibilities that just might win over the occasional commercial radio MD - let's hope they do.

Planet of Spiders-"Hey" This is the first demo I've heard that was recorded in "The Sonic Studio," which belongs to SFU's Communications Department, and I can't say that I'd recommend it. Perhaps the recording facilities can be blamed for the muddiness here, and the way the guitars with too much midrange) sound like keyboards. It's also unfortunate that "Hey" probably isn't the band's most memorable song ("I Had," the second selection on the tape, is more representative of their harder (and better) side, and was the song that stood out most in their Shindig performances. Stylistically Planet of Spiders are a lot like the Gruesomes and other recent garage-'60s bands, but usually with a cleaner and more controlled sound. I guess it's just going to take a better recording to do them justice.

Evan Symons-"The Spider and Ze Watch" Angela Symons (nee Rancourt) is singing her own lyrics here, which would make you wonder why it's Evan who's got his name on the tape if this weren't the only song where she does. While the vocals themselves are all right, as is the musicianship, this song simply goes on for too long, which leaves the listener with the feeling that it's just useless and confused. "The Spider" has its moments, but Evan and Angela probably aren't going to make a big splash with this one.

sitely produced, played, and sung. So what if these aren't their best lyrics? Don't listen to the words, just enjoy the nice sound.

Tankhog-"Reptilion" (sic), "Tears" Wow! Tankhog outpowers the competition.

Seethru Flowers-"To Cynthia Gray" Robin Platts (bass, guitar, vocals) now sings and strums for another Victoria band, 64 Funnies. On the whole, this tape is an odd combination of primitive recording techniques and relatively high-tech effects (mainly on the vocals), and these seven songs do suffer from the flatness that often plagues studio projects (since there are only two people in the band. I'm just assuming it's a studio project). In spite of the not-so-great recording quality, some of this sounds very pretty (one song goes so far as to be a little reminiscent of '60s BeeGees) and "Cynthia Gray," the first and best song, is short, simple, and (in the finest pop-rock traditions) also has a chorus that'll stick in your head.

While I, myself, find it hard to sing along with lyrics like "She's a reptile," and this is hardly to be confused with Slow (in spite of the two bands having more than a mighty bass player in common), I hope, at the very least, that people will stop acting like Mudgehony is the only band worth banging your head to in this part of the world.

Jimmy Roy's 5 Star Hillbillies-"Everybody's Talkin'" Quite simply, this is beautiful sounding. Yes, the music's more hillbilly than rockabilly, which means you can't jump around to it much, but this tape is awfully nice to listen to. I just wish someone would tell me where it was recorded.

And now the tapes you can buy for your very own (either in the shops or from the bands themselves):

Green House-"Spring Will Call" Like everything else on this tape (previously on our playlist: "Dive") this is exquisi-

Rooted. In an ideal world, there'd be a new Roots Roundup tape every summer to listen to while lying out in the sun somewhere. Fortunately, it often seems to turn out that way - this one has arrived in stores just in time for the good weather. These eight songs may be the best-sounding to ever emerge from Profile Studios. My favourite (playlisted at the station) is probably "Sleepin'," which mixes up an immensely pleasurable combination of harmonicas, horns, guitars, and words that are somehow both sad and good-natured and only contribute to the cheerful tone of the song. Buy the tape!

Drums Along the Gardiner-Boronto. "My Hometown" and the title song are the two playlisted at CTR, but "She Said No" and "Beergut" (at least) are also bound to stay in your head for a while. My copy of this tape has been rattling around in my car for a couple of months now, and this has given me time to evolve a theory about punk rock recording: mainly that music in this genre, when made immaculate by 24-track studios, lots of EQing, effects, and noise reduction, almost always loses something of its essence. Happily, this isn't what happened with Boronto. There's just a lot of sing-along-able sneering, growling, and yelling with a nasty blur of guitars and thudding drums. Although, as you may have guessed, they're from Toronto, once-Vancouverite Pete Moss fronts the band. (Also buy their "Fish" single - the one with the Indian chief on the sleeve.)

Wages of Sin-Wages of Sin. This tape, and its playlisted song, "Pretty Blonde Enigma," are this month's most pleasant surprise. These are the new-and-improved Wages, with poppier, more powerful and varied songs, enthusiastic backup vocals, and an unstoppable beat. The lyrics are tantalizingly tricky to make out (there is a lyric sheet, but I don't know if it comes with the tape or only in the promo package) but usually worth the effort and, ultimately, appealingly simple. While all four of these songs are catchy, "Pretty Blonde Enigma" probably is the most. Never mind that Gary (the singer) said the song could be about me - bet he says that to all the reviewers.

Bug Head
Jojoka
Town Pump
Tuesday, April 3rd

It would be easy to dismiss Jojoka as pretentious art-wank, what with Mark Critchley's banks of synths, Sonda Lockwood's "serious" lyrics and posturing and the slow motion big screen video backdrop, but that wouldn't really be fair. Jojoka's chosen multimedia performance style is difficult, both technically and as far as audiences go - going on stage at the sparsely populated Town Pump with a fish strapped to your chest takes a lot of guts.

When the separate elements of video, sound, movement and voice did mesh cohesively, the result was startling and very enjoyable. False colour water videos combined with ethereal keyboard and voice to create a mesmerizing montage.

All too often though, the performance was held up by technical hitches and Mark Critchley's determination to show his versatility on electric piano, guitar, synths and drum pads. The minutes between songs that were spent setting up his colossal hardware arrangement spoilt the continuity of the performance and distracted the audience. I always thought that the technology was there to make complicated changeovers unnecessary, and when you go on stage with that kind of backup, you have to make sure its going to impress or else risk the title of "Wealthy Music Hobbyist." As I've said though, when it worked it was great, and a refreshing change from Town Pump guitar bands.

Bug Head were excellent. From Seattle, the band consists of a drummer, bassist and keyboard player, but really the group is expanded by their lighting engineer and two dancers, who give the show its visual impact.

They play dance music, specifically House. The basic beats and samples are on tape, and the musicians play over this, crashing in and working the piece to a frenzy, or sometimes stopping altogether and letting the tape carry it. The dancers intensify the energy, as do the pulsating slides, and when Bug Head are in top gear they kick out incredibly powerful chunks of rhythm. The drummer, freed from time-keeping constraints by the tape, pitches in snapping cross-patterns a la Keith LeBlanc, and the bassist alternates with the tape in playing slap or hard dub.

What this band do is pretty well unique around these parts, and adding the live facet to House Music changes it from a cold, machine music to real live sweaty dance workouts, with musicians who are able to react to the crowd and alter the mood appropriately.

What pissed me off was the lack of support for this gig. Okay, they're not big names but they have had exposure, on CTR and at a gig at the Commodore earlier this year. It always amazes me why people are willing to pay $25 to see some English "alternative star" bore (Matt Johnson?) play songs that sound just like the album versions, in exactly the same way as the previous night, or even six months ago in another continent, with no acknowledgement of the audience at all, yet they aren't risk six bucks on a couple of new bands who are actually still into the idea of communication. At the Bug Head gig not only were they relaxed enough to take time out to sing "Happy Birthday" to one of their dancers (now I know why they're an instrumental band!), but the audience all got invited to the after gig party! If you're into dancing (and if you ain't, you're dead) then next time Bug Head come to town go see them. They combine the funkier Acid House with the intensity of a live band, and they love what they're doing.

Babes In Toyland
Marshmallow Overcoat
Numb
Club Soda
Tuesday, April 10th

If Angus Young was a girl, instead of the manly Australian guy that he is, (s)he would probably still have picked up a guitar, donned a parochial school uniform, and formed a band. And that band just might have been Babes in Toyland. This all-girl Minneapolis trio a Totally N-Tolerable Tuesday in April somewhat tolerable. (Just ask the head-bobbing Superconductor members who remained in awe at the front of the stage throughout the Babes' set.) What the band lacked in song variety and virtuosity they more than made up for by their extra loud crunchy guitars that complemented the wildly, flailing, screaming antics of the Youngesque lead singer.

After an "ambitiously long set," the steadily growing crowd was ready for headlining Numb, but Marshmallow Overcoat, a garage-y five piece from Tucson, Arizona, took the stage. The few eager dancers who were encouraged to gyrate might have briefly mistaken Club Soda for a UBC frat dance.

The confused were quickly brought back to reality as Numb began their orchestrated mayhem. With lights, smoke, and a somewhat forced sense of impending doom, the four members of the local industrial/noise ensemble took over. Lead singer Blair Dobson tore into the crowd in more than one way. He also announced that this was to be the last local show for Numb. This is bad news. A Numb show is a brilliant amalgamation of a frenetic Big Black performance, interesting arrangements and sounds, and a Graceland dance mix.

Although industrial music has become something of a Vancouver mainstay, with several offerings to choose from, Numb has managed to remain unique and avoid the trite and boring Gothic gore that has become so much a part of the genre. This is definitely a plus for fans of loud noise/thrash music who have something other than black in their wardrobes.

If you ever again get the chance, remember, a night with Numb is worth a slight hearing loss.

Einsturzende Neubauten
Haus der Luege
(Some Bizarre)

Wow. EN have truly evolved. Never mind the glorified press-release liner notes ("EN's music now sounds uncannily prophetic, their previously reviled lessons in dissonance, disruption and disfunction fully vindicated by scientific studies of natural chaotic patterns..." blah blah blah). It's my bet that were these songs to be performed/mutated at a free-for-all venue like the Expo bowl, just as many people would leave. On the other hand, this is their first album that doesn't demand listening to on headphones, which should come as a relief to all those fans who have to worry about their hair staying up.

Overall, the band's sound is a lot cleaner, more connected and concrete (figuratively now, not literally as in the past). "Haus der Luege," translating as "House of Lies," reads like an epitaph for the '80s and a pre-ognition of the '90s in one. A soundtrack for our days, to be sure.

"Ein Stuhl in der Hoele" is the closest EN have come to a capella, the lyrics accompanied only by "footstomps and amateur tap dancing." "Timeless and haunting Central European folk blues" the liner notes also say. Yeah, I guess. But I'm loath to slap pat synopses on EN's stuff, especially the amazing components of this album.

"Hirnlego" ("Brainlego") captures so terrifically what it must be like to be schizophrenic, that if it weren't for the inherent humour to lighten it up, it'd descend into a parody of itself.

And so on. No filler here, unless one looks at it from the perspective of EN being elevator music for the criminally insane, in which case it's all filler, and damn good filler at that. Those highfalutin' liner notes do, if you read far enough through them, yield a pithy quote by which "Haus der Luege" may be summed up: "Nor does God get off lightly." Amen.

Cows
Daddy Has A Tail!
(Amphetamine Reptile)

"IF YOU ARE OFFENDED BY SCENES OF SEXUAL ACTIVITY, DO NOT ENTER THESE PREMISES." This album could do with a warning sticker to that effect on its cover. Course, the depiction of Wilma Flintstone as a three-breasted frog serves the purpose just as well. Yup, you got yerself another kooky 'n' warped band from some part of the Mid-West, and one that kicks butt at that. Though the tunage occasionally bogs down into (or should I say, "speeds up into") kinda generic hardcore mode, as on "Camouflage Monkey" and half of "Bum in the Alley," for the most part the Cows serve up a hefty platter of juice-oozing, mind-bending muck. A Mid-West interpretation of grunge, if you will.

Lines like "I saw a girl...She was so pretty/She made me understand...That she was the girl to finally make me a man..." don't score high on the originality meter, true. But a few lines later you come across a gem like "I am a waffle and you are the syrup/I am covered with square dents, you are sticky and sweet." Eat your heart out, Aunt Jemima.

Rife with sexual warification, "Tail" should be avoided by anyone the least bit unclear as to her/his gender identity, because it'll screw your mind around badly. These are a bunch of troubled boys (?) alright. But hey, all the more fun. The band's musical acumen — feedback, pulsating bass seeping out of every crack, obnoxious horn-attack guitars — provides the ideal foil for the twisted lyrics. And dig those total '70s FM radio echo chamber vocals on "Chasin' Darla." "You say I'm not a way-ay-ay-ake..."

Notwithstanding all these pluses, the record would be worth buying for the title "Part My Konk" alone. WAAAAAAY!

Prong
Beg to Differ
(CBS)

This is Prong's first release for a major bigtime label. Fortunately, the band hasn't sacrificed anything musically for their new bosses. For the unhip, Prong is a throbbing, grinding, super-heavy three piece from New York. Comprised of ex-members of Damage, Swans and the Radium Boys, Prong rides the fine line between metal and hardcore punk. Thankfully, perhaps due to the group's punk rock background (two members work at NYC's CBGB's, the ultimate hardcore homeland), Prong is far more intense, intelligent and innovative than the speed-metal freaks they are often compared to.

Prong's sound is difficult to describe. I'd call it a sort of "Metallica shuffle", played with great restraint with respect to speed and flaming guitar solos. Also, Prong has a refreshingly honest and simple approach to the issues dealt with on "Beg to Differ" (cool punk rock stuff like civilization, conformity and the fall of society). So, check out Prong, one of the best "what evercore" bands around.

Death
Spiritual Healing (Combat)

Right on, dudes! These guys play soooo fast! "Spiritual Healing" is, like, a totally crucial album. I mean, these guys thank their instruments! Yeah, and on "Living Monstrosity" they sing about cool stuff like killing women who have kids born addicted to drugs. Check this out: "Some say she's naive/She's a stupid bitch/Some say to forgive/Rightly, she must die." Yeah, guilty, son!

The next song, "Altering the Future," is about killing women who have abortions. "Life for a life should remain the rule... look to the past is what we should do/When justice was done and justice was true." I couldn't have said it better, man!

Oh yeah, Death think so much of themselves that they credit every masturbatory guitar solo. If that isn't enough, the singer sounds like he's drowning in oatmeal, and all the band members wear fat guy muscle shirts. Bitchin' dude! By the way, does anyone want my Death cassette?

The Cynics
Rock 'n' Roll
(Get Hip)

On their last album, "Twelve Flights Up," Pittsburgh PA's Cynics offered up sounds similar to "Surrealistic Pillow" period Jefferson Airplane. There are none of those allusions on "Rock 'n' Roll." The Cynics have dropped the Wurlitzer organ and turned up the guitars in order to blast out some straight ahead, unrestrained 'n' roll.

Lead singer Michael Kastelic sings/yells so hard it sounds like his voice will pack it in after each song. The adept rhythm section combines with Kastelic's primal vocals and guitarist Greg Kostelich's stinging riffs to create fourteen songs of tightly wound '80s garage rock. Credit must go to Greg Vizza, whose deft production gives the album a crisp, unnumbered sound.

"Rock 'n' Roll" is the Cynics' best LP and one of this year's finest independent releases.

Greg Garlick

The Cynics are playing the Town Pump on May 22nd.

Burton Cummings
Plus Signs
(Capitol)

My first exposure to Winnepeg's second most famous son was the dreadful expansive ballad, "Melanie." Full of trite sentiment, the song was only pushed to hit status by the movie of the same name, which, incidentally, starred our poor, hapless Burton. Of course, I knew him by reputation as the impassioned wild man of the Guess Who — I probably saw a reunion concert on television at some point.

On this comeback album, Burton gets intensely personal. He strips bare his everyday existence to reveal his failings. He tells us what contributed to this revival. The album paints a portrait of a guy — yeah, just an ordinary guy, somewhat of a poet, though aren't we all? — who's reached an impasse, dealt with it and emerged from it all with a new outlook on life. No excuses are made for past failings. "Plus Signs" signals a new spurt of activity for this volcano from the age of the dinosaurs.

The key line can be found in the first single, "Take One Away," where Burton sings: "Mama, I've joined the church, y'know." No, not that church, but the sacred ground of the unknowable. The ether of the mind, man. Culling inspiration from Stephen Hawking's "A Brief History of Time," Burton has come up with his philosophy of a temporal conscious plane existing within the great being that is the universe.

Ironically, the only clunker here is the track, "Cerebral World," in which he spells out his new understanding. In five different places on the record he mentions the influence — or manipulative quality — of time, in each instance pronouncing the word "time" differently so as to emphasise the very malleable nature of it.

On "Bridge in Time" he evokes the names of the past, Johnny and the Hurricanes and Henry Mancini, repeating them over and over like his own personal mantra. Bells and a sitar-like drone fill out the soundscape to produce a rather-worldly effect. Hypnotic. However, the real payoff comes when you've sat through to the end of side two to discover the Vegas-y (hints of a possible career move, hmmm?) "Boring Dreams" and the timely "Free." Both celebrate the liberation of the mind from its snarls of logic and old habits. Burton sends a compassionate and congratulatory slap on the back to the people of Eastern Europe, but he is really addressing the home front, his audience, with the lines "You will find lessons in the teaching and learning, and you will walk prouder 'cause you will be free."

More often than not, Burton's new '90s sound is nothing special. But it'll get on the radio where deeper thoughts are few and far between.

John Zorn
Spy Vs. Spy
Naked City
(WEA)

These two records were released within six months of each other, and both demonstrate New York saxman John Zorn's ever increasing romance with the extreme.

"Spy Vs. Spy" is the name given to Zorn's collection of Ornette Coleman-penned songs. Zorn tears strips off the Ornette mystique and pays tribute to the jazz great's compositional skill at the same time.

The "treatment" each of these sixteen songs receives consists of the band playing the characteristically brief theme once or twice, the dual saxes then breaking off into spastic squeals and honks, mad-dervish style drumming from the two drummers and a rudimentary sort of key feeling applied by the bassist, who is alone in his venture to hold some semblance of order. They all return to the theme. And end. This is done at an incredible breakneck pace. They swiftly kicked into another song, performed in the same manner.

The sheer relentlessness of this approach mimics Ornette's trait of using repetition to the point of making your ears beg for a respite. And it's all plated with all the same emotional ambivalence that Ornette applies to his art. The music is exhausting, and certainly to be taken in a full dose for recommended effect. As the ubiquitous "they" say: in short, a masterpiece.

Now take "Naked City." Smack dab in the middle of this album is a little three minute surprise. The only way I can try to describe it is to ask you to imagine the last time you suffered from a really painful toe stubbing. Or maybe you've lived through a true mishap, the featured memory of which is a short but seemingly interminable burst of the most excruciating pain that you could ever believe possible. Or maybe you've given birth. Imagine that pain... tenfold... imagine the soundtrack to that pain. Imagine that soundtrack being as close to you as the nearest record store. Imagine that those eight songs (average length: twenty seconds) are but a brief portion of an hour's worth of the most varied musical sandwich you can bite into. Do I need to say more? Surf, reggae, boogie-woogie, sleazy lounge jazz, funk, bebop, thumba and the above mentioned punk rock blitzkrieg. And that's just one song.

"Naked City" might as well be a retrospective of the whole John Zorn trip. He has assembled the cream of the American avant garde - pared down from the number that appeared on The Big Gundown. He treats familiar ground with Morricone and Ornette Coleman covers and, like his Spillane opus, this album could sport the warning: "completely concerned with crime" (that of the inner-city television/movie crime drama variety). The inside sleeve of the CD features a colour illustration of a tattooed man holding his hand up to his head, apparently to hold in the blood gushing from the place where his ear - now sailing through the air - had been.

Both albums are only available on cassette and compact disc.

Stumpy Joe
Day Dreams 7"
(Estrus Records)

Stumpy Joe is a new, young, power-pop garage band from Seattle whose debut single on Estrus Records is excellent. "Day Dreams," the A-side, is an amazingly catchy garage song with all the right elements to be a real underground/college radio hit. Complete with raucous, clear and powerful vocals, intelligent lyrics, Replacement-style lead guitar, and a groovy, rocking rhythm section, Stumpy Joe is a band that ain't gonna miss. "Day Dreams" gives me a picture of a band who's young and innocent, with incredible potential.

The flip side, "Basketcase," tops off a great single. Lyrics like "You're the Grand Marshall of the parade of my mistakes" makes this a superb tune.

Another plus is the very cool, limited edition red vinyl. Hopefully, we'll see a full LP from these guys on either Estrus or Poplarna Records really soon.

Available from local indie record stores, or direct from Stumpy Joe c/o Estrus Records, P.O. Box 2125, Bellingham WA, 98227, USA.

Especially riveting is the power of lead singer Manon Briere, whose vocal chords go into spasms as she shouts out the lyrics. The course, dense layer of sound of the music adds to the sense of unleashed pent up emotions, frustration in particular, evoked by Briere's vocals.

This album is a fine debut from a band who can definitely give Fugazi a run for their money.

Bloodsister
Bloodsister
(109 Records)

Out of New York's Lower East side comes Bloodsister, a band consisting of five female thrashers, blasting out the grungiest rock 'n' roll this side of Killdozer.

Produced by Don Fury (responsible for producing bands such as Agnostic Front and Guerrilla Biscuits), this LP delivers a strong throbbing wall-to-wall sound to berate anyone's frontal lobes. This is not to say that Bloodsister's debut LP is migraine material but, with the volume cranked, it could cause a mild stroke.

bands in the world are: Victoria's Nomeansno, England's Snuff, and Washington, D.C.'s Fugazi. The best of these three is... whoever has the most recent release. So for the time being, it is Fugazi.

After seven, six, and three track EPs, their fourth release is a full length album. Eleven songs of intelligent, emotional intensity created not by speed, volume, nor complexity, but by honest, thoughtful songwriting and solid musicianship. But don't these qualities have to be present in all good hardcore songs you may ask. Yes, but Fugazi put something else into their music that I can't quite put my finger on.

Perhaps it's that Fugazi's songs fit any mood, frame of mind, or time of day. It's happy or sad, early morning, late night, and early afternoon. Music. Fugazi's "Repeater" is just the thing to listen to no matter what you are trying to do, except maybe trying to fall asleep.

Or perhaps the difference is Ian MacKaye, ex of Minor Threat, Big Black, and Embrace, and the originator of the "straight edge" movement.

Or it could be that Fugazi are the ultimate in motivational music. They are the best at making you re-think your goals and inspiring to achieve them.

Whatever it is that makes Fugazi special, the proof is in the pudding". So find a copy of "Repeater," pay attention, and don't waste any time.

Grant Hart
Intolerance
(SST)

Remember Grant Hart... the drummer from Husker Du? Yeah that's right, the one who wrote better songs, had a better voice, and didn't get a major label deal.

His debut album, "Intolerance," is on SST but don't expect "Land Speed Record II." Like ex-Husker Du guitarist Bob Mould's album, "Intolerance" does not share many traits with his old band's sound. Rather than a heavy droning guitar, half the songs are soaked with a Melotron organ in a hip shakin', not headbanging, groove. The opener, "All Of My Sense," is reminiscent of the keyboard work in Santanas' "Black Magic Woman," but in a good way. The second cut, the rockin' "Now That You Know Me," forays into a "Highway 61" are Dylan, with a great lead harmonica.

The first single, "Twenty-five Forty-one," the address where Hart lived with an old girlfriend, relates the sadness of moving out of a much loved apartment and the unwelcome end to a relationship. ("It was the first place we had to ourselves, I didn't know it would be the last.") This kind of personal politics and love gone wrong lyrical content, which also appears in songs like "Fanfare In D Major," "The Main," and the true smooth "You're the Victim" (of yourself and no-one else"), remains from the Husker Du days.

By moving away from drumming, in favour of keyboards, Grant Hart not only has a lot of piano and organ in the background, but he also provides an organ based instrumental entitled "Roller-Rink," as well as the hymn-like "She Can See The Angels Coming."

The sloppy production, which gives the album a more intimate feel, seems to be intentional. With a bit of editing this could have been one excellent EP. As it is, it's still a pretty good LP. Because of the quality of "Intolerance," I'll buy Hart's next album even before hearing it; and while I've heard Bob Mould's record, I haven't bought it.

The Fall
Extricate
(Cog-Sinister)

Every once in a while a band comes along that no matter how good they are musically, they can't be enjoyed because of the obnoxious and arrogant lead personality. Some examples would be Morrissey of the Smiths, Paul Weller when he was in the Jam (there was nothing enjoyable about the Style Council) and Steve Albini of Big Black / Rapeman. Most people would think that this would apply to Mark E. Smith of The Fall, but just the opposite is true in this case. The obnoxious arrogance of M.E.S. actually heightens the pleasure when listening to the band's albums, including their fourteenth, "Extricate."

This album, their first "post-Brix" album - Brix being Smith's now ex-wife and guitarist on the Fall's last seven albums - proves that she was not an essential element in creating the disjointed rhythms and venomous lyrics which have come to represent the Fall's music. We hear Smith chanting "You You You You You You know I hate you baby, you mad-just little monkey," doubtfully a reference to Brix, in the song "Black Monk Theme Part I." We also hear him actually SINGING "these are the finest days of my life" in "Bill is Dead," and we can't doubt him on this point.

On "Extricate" we get a virtual short history of the Fall: the pseudo dance tracks, the stream of consciousness grunge, the full throttle pop tunes, and even the well chosen cover ("Popcorn Double Feature"). All the things that the Fall constantly flirt with are represented but with much better production this time.

A LITTLE MAN, FALLING

It seems as if only a few moments have passed, but he's sure it has been hours. His eyelids are sticky and the scent that wafts up to him from his prone body is rank. This is the day, he knows, and he sinks back to the pillow, closes his eyes, and tries desperately to gather his thoughts. If Mr. Patterson had not been mellow from lunchtime martinis, it would have been all over yesterday. No job, no friends, no money christ no money. Dark paleolithic fear grips his guts and he begins to sweat. If I fuck up again today, that's it, he tells himself. Today is the day. His bowels tremble, and he dashes to the toilet, feeling small and abject and terrified.

It seems as if only a few moments have passed, but he's sure it's been hours. Somehow the icy wind that has howled past his tent all night has found its way in, and its cold challenging tongue licks quietly at his ear. He is awake quickly, and quickly begins to heat water on his small burner. This is it, he thinks. He hopes to banish fear with movement. It works.

Nigel is at Nigel's desk as he tears into the office, late, and Colin is at Colin's desk. Only his desk is empty, free of clutter, devoid of activity. His scalding shower did little to wash away the stink of fear, and now the odour percolates redoubled through his shirt and tie and tailored jacket.

"Patterson here yet?" he hisses to Nigel as he scurries by.

Nigel looks up, mutters "Yah," with undisguised contempt, and returns to his market analysis.

"Oh Jesus."

"He wants to talk to you."

"Oh Jesus."

He's midway up a two hundred metre rock face when he slips. The smallest finger of his right hand is firmly lodged in a crack, and this saves him. The moment stretches like this: the narrow ledge he'd chosen to momentarily support his weight gives way underfoot, he claws for a new handhold with his left hand, the crevice that was a godsend a second before now bites ferociously down on his right little finger, his scrabbling left hand finds no purchase, and he swings freely, supported only by that one finger. All in a second. He feels a tearing, a popping, a quick heat in his left hand, and begins to fall, to bounce. A ledge ten metres lower stops him, most of him. He's left a finger in one of the mountain's mouths.

"Oh Jesus."

Blood drips from a gory socket.

"Oh Jesus."

His face is suffused with blood as he cleans out his desk. All he gets from his co-workers, his friends, is "Canned you, eh? Too bad." Visions of murder, of his mother, of the last girl he slept with, of suicide, all jostle for centre stage in his mind. He's numbed, without control, he fills his briefcase automatically and without a word he leaves the office. The remnants of what had been his life go into his status symbol car, his body goes into a bar. His entire life had been designed to get him that job, and he'd fucked it up from the first moment. Now he thinks with a little drunken grin at his own wit, his entire life is in the glass in front of him. So be it, he thinks, drink up. And he does. And he makes a decision.

Blood is all over his right hand, staining his tights and his intact left hand. He loathes himself. He came to prove something to himself, to set himself a test of his own making, and he's failed. Were he less afraid, less in pain, he might continue, but he knows he won't. He just wants to get down now, off the mountain, away from the scene of his failure, away from shrieking harpies circling in his skull and crying "Coward!" in the silken voices of beautiful young women. He's paralyzed for a moment, but when a parcel of agony slides up his arm, he moves. He makes a decision.

She's very young, too young certainly to be here with him, paid for, in his unpaid-for automobile. He's drunk and nervous, and he needs to feel in control. She's bored and strung out, and she needs to eat. He roughly forces her head into his lap, and she wearily complies.

He's twenty below the ledge that saved his life, when he slips again. This time he makes no effort to clutch the rock face and he falls, gracefully. He doesn't feel the cold stone as it smashes his skull.

His penis slips between her lips, and he grunts his approval. Everything is going to be ok. He doesn't feel the myriad motes of lethal virus enter his body as he enters hers.

He is lucky who can choose the manner of his own death.
